

Building Community, Making Peace

A Restorative Church Gathering

Across the country, people are turning to restorative justice practices to strengthen community, create dialogue across divisions, and prevent and respond to conflict and harm. These practices are consistent with Christian teachings and values, and churches are using them to build the beloved community.

We invite Christian clergy, lay people, seminary students and other interested people to join Restorative Church for this one-day event following the NACRJ's 9th National Conference on Community and Restorative Justice.

Experience the power of restorative practices to create spaces for healing, belonging and community, especially in these difficult times.

Learn about restorative practices and how they harmonize with Christian beliefs and practice.

Be inspired and encouraged by examples of how churches are using restorative practices effectively in their internal and external ministries.

Connect with others who are exploring restorative practices in their churches and communities, especially in the greater Washington area.
